

Michael Chokhov

June 30, 1937

STYLE

STYLE:

The Fishing Scene should be considered as drama near to tragedy; the theme of death and drowning is almost tragic and the milieu is very dramatic. With regard to the question of clichés - this is always two-sided. The author must try to find more interesting words and sentences, but the actors must also try to justify what they are given.